The Unseen World by Liz Moore

Ada Sibelius enjoys deciphering codes. Homeschooled in her father David's computer science lab where he works in Artificial Intelligence, this is not surprising. However, when David's sharp mind is clouded by Alzheimer's, Ada is taken in by a colleague's family and begins to attend a Catholic school. Here she recognizes that she is ill-prepared for the social nuances of interacting with other teens. She also begins to question her father's identity and his past. Uncovering a cryptic computer file he has left for her called "The Unseen World" Ada begins to work out the cipher of David and his legacy for the future.

Unearthed by Alexandra Risen

Alexandra Risen and her family start restoring a large woefully abandoned Toronto garden while simultaneously dealing with the decline and death of her parents. Inheriting only silence about the past, Risen slowly gathers courage to investigate and narrate her family's immigrant history. She unearths not only the bare facts of war atrocities and mass migration, but also clues explaining her parents' tense relationship, their obsessions and neglect of their daughters. Intermingled between these discoveries are also the honest anecdotes of identity and the garden's mesmerising resurrection.
