Three generations of Milton's have spent summers on Crockett Island, Maine when Evie and her cousins realize that they no longer have the means to keep it in the family. As a History Professor, Evie's natural inclination is to sift through stories of the past, but on the island she discovers two lifetimes of secrets buried by her grandmother, Kitty, and her mother, Joan. The novel explores how decisions, including their grandfather Ogden's investments during WWII, inevitably influences the family's future. Themes of racism, morality, entitlement and influence are explored through the lives of the Milton family and the carefully chosen words of author Sarah Blake. Even when you find the characters' decisions difficult to read you will be spellbound by 'The Guest Book'.

Non-Fiction

At 23, Anna Maxymiw detours from her life plan. Craving change, she shifts from being a city dweller, to a remote wilderness explorer, and from a Master's student, to a housekeeper charged with tough and sometimes disgusting work. It turns out being staff at a remote fishing lodge in Northern Ontario, when she'd previous been a guest, are very different experiences. The shifts Maxymiw chooses bring about more than just a summer of adventure. They cause transformational changes. A love story to nature's quiet symphony of sounds and life in the wilderness, this memoir will make you laugh, cry, and feel some twinges of disgust. Most importantly its vibrant descriptions will make you feel like you're alongside Anna as she conquers the wilderness.

Whether it is the astonishing journeys of monarch butterflies, migrating birds, whales, salmon, insects or sea turtles David Barrie provides an entertaining tour of the many ways that animals navigate the world. Some travel by scent, light or the earth's magnetic fields, and some animals travel is not yet fully understood. For example, how are dragonflies able to fly 3,500 kilometers across the ocean without stopping? Barrie is also interested in how humans have navigated the globe. He is a member of the Royal Institute of Navigation and has sailed around the world. Look for more stories of his voyages in his book 'Sextant: a young man's daring sea voyage and the men who mapped the world's oceans.'

Fiction

Is there a moment in your life that you would do over? Neuroscientist Helena Smith's research into recording memories for Alzheimer patients hits a dead end just before she meets Philanthropist Marcus Slade. 10 years later, NY Detective Barry Sutton's investigation into False Memory Syndrome – a syndrome that creates a fork in your memory based on two different outcomes of the same event – leads him to Helena. Together they uncover the scope of the damage done by Slade's misuse of Helena's research, which leads them to discover just how far they will go to stop him. Just like 'Dark Matter', with 'Recursion' Blake Crouch expertly blends genres - horror, speculative fiction, and romance. The effect will keep you reading (and thinking) until the very end.
